SECTION 01

A Flybridge Yacht Built for the Marbella Coast

The Azimut 39 is one of those boats that does its talking the moment she comes off the berth. She is a 12.5 metre flybridge motor yacht built by Azimut, the Italian shipyard whose name has become shorthand for a certain kind of Mediterranean glamour, and she carries up to eleven guests out of Puerto Banus. On a coast that has no shortage of pretty boats, she stands out for a specific reason: she gives you a proper upper deck. The flybridge is the heart of the Azimut experience and the single feature most groups remember once the day is over.

Where many day yachts of this size offer one level of living space, the Azimut 39 stacks the experience. Down below and at cockpit level you have a large saloon wrapped in panoramic windows and a shaded aft deck, and up top you have a second helm and a generous sunbathing pad with the whole of the Marbella shoreline laid out in front of you. It means the boat works for two kinds of guest at once: those who want sun, a drink and a view, and those who want shade, comfort and the chance to step away from the heat of the afternoon. Few boats in the fleet split that difference as neatly.

She is also, by design, an easy boat to charter. Every rate on the Azimut 39 already includes a licensed skipper, fuel, a selection of drinks, light snacks, insurance, safety equipment and Spanish VAT at 21 per cent. There are no hidden extras to negotiate at the pontoon and nothing to arrange yourself beyond turning up with swimwear and sunscreen. That combination of Italian styling, a real flybridge and a genuinely all-inclusive rate is what makes her a popular pick for groups who want the upper sun-deck day without stepping up to a superyacht budget.

Azimut: The Marque Behind the Boat

To understand why the Azimut 39 looks and feels the way she does, it helps to know a little about the yard that builds her. Azimut is one of the best known names in production motor yachting, an Italian company founded in Turin in 1969 that grew from a small charter and brokerage operation into a builder with a presence in marinas right across the Mediterranean. Today the wider Azimut Benetti group is among the largest privately held shipbuilding businesses in the world, and the Azimut brand sits at the heart of it, turning out everything from compact flybridge cruisers like this one up to large ocean-going yachts.

What Azimut became famous for is design. The yard built its reputation on a willingness to treat a motor yacht as a piece of styling as much as a piece of engineering, and over the decades it has worked with some of Italy's most respected naval architects and interior designers. The result is a recognisable house language: clean horizontal lines, large areas of glass, light and airy interiors, and a confident, slightly sporty stance on the water. When people talk about a boat looking unmistakably Italian, an Azimut is very often the shape they have in mind.

That heritage matters on a charter day in a very practical way. A yard with this much experience in production yachts has spent fifty years refining how people actually live aboard for a few hours or a few days: where the sun falls on the deck, how guests move between the cockpit and the flybridge, how to get the most usable space out of a hull of a given length. The Azimut 39 is the small end of that tradition, but she carries the same thinking. She feels like a boat that was designed around the people on board rather than around a spec sheet, and that is exactly what you want from a vessel you are taking out for a celebration.

The Flybridge Class and What It Is Known For

The Azimut 39 belongs to a category that does a great deal of the work on the Costa del Sol: the flybridge motor yacht. The defining feature is in the name. A flybridge is a second, open deck built above the main saloon, usually with a duplicate set of helm controls and a large expanse of seating and sunpads. It is the highest point on the boat that you can comfortably sit, and on a clear Marbella day it is the best seat in the house.

Flybridge yachts earned their popularity in the Mediterranean for reasons that are obvious the moment you climb the steps. The upper deck catches the breeze, lifts you clear of the spray and gives you an unbroken horizon in every direction, from the white towers of Puerto Banus to the bulk of La Concha mountain behind the town and, on the clearest days, the silhouette of Gibraltar and the North African coast to the west. It is a vantage point that turns a simple coastal cruise into something that feels genuinely special.

The class is also prized for how it separates a group without dividing it. While some guests stretch out on the flybridge sunpad, others can sit in the shade of the aft cockpit, and a third group can be in the water off the swim platform, all of them part of the same day. The second helm on the Azimut 39's flybridge is a small detail with a big effect: it means the skipper can run the boat from up top in good weather, sitting among the guests rather than below them, which gives the whole day a relaxed, social feel. This is the layout that took the flybridge yacht from a practical cruising tool to the default choice for celebrations along this stretch of coast, and the Azimut 39 is a clean, well-proportioned example of it.

On Board: Layout, Saloon, Cabins and Deck

Step aboard and the Azimut 39 organises herself around two simple ideas: sun on the flybridge and shade in the saloon. Here is what the vessel offers, drawn from her own specification.

- ✦ Flybridge with a second helm and a sunbathing pad. The upper deck where most of the day is spent, with controls so the skipper can run the boat from up top.
- ✦ Sleek Italian styling. Azimut's signature reverse sheer line, the detail that gives the boat her modern, purposeful profile.
- ✦ A large saloon with panoramic windows. An air-conditioned, shaded space wrapped in glass, ideal for a cooler hour in the middle of the afternoon or a sheltered lunch.
- ✦ Two cabins plus a convertible saloon. Enough to sleep guests aboard, which makes the boat suitable for the occasional overnight as well as day charters.
- ✦ Twin diesel engines with an 18-knot cruise. The power to reach a swim stop quickly and to range further along the coast on a full day.

The flow between these spaces is what makes the boat work. The aft cockpit is the natural gathering point as you leave the marina, shaded and close to the water. From there a few steps take you up to the flybridge or down into the saloon, so guests can drift between sun, shade and the sea throughout the day without ever feeling penned in. The panoramic windows in the saloon are a particular highlight: they keep the interior bright and connected to the view even when you have stepped inside out of the midday heat, which is something older enclosed boats rarely manage.

The two cabins and convertible saloon are worth a word for what they make possible. Most charters on the Azimut 39 are day trips, but the sleeping accommodation means she is equally comfortable for a longer outing, a sunset-to-late-evening charter, or a short overnight away from the marina. It is a quiet flexibility that a pure open day-boat cannot offer, and it widens the range of occasions the boat can take on.

SECTION 05

A Day Aboard from Puerto Banus

The best way to understand the Azimut 39 is to walk through a typical charter day, the kind of outing most groups book. Your skipper meets you at the berth in Puerto Banus a little before the agreed departure time for a short, friendly welcome and a safety briefing. Boarding is straightforward from the pontoon, the drinks are already chilling on board, and within a few minutes you are easing out past the breakwater with the marina's famous line of yachts to one side and the open Mediterranean ahead.

Once clear of the harbour, the skipper brings the twin diesels up to a comfortable cruise and the boat settles into her stride. This is usually the moment guests climb to the flybridge for the first time, drinks in hand, to watch the coastline open out. A short run along the shore brings you to the first swim stop, often off the Golden Mile, the strip of coast between Puerto Banus and Marbella town lined with the grandest villas and beach clubs on the Costa del Sol. The skipper finds a calm spot, drops the anchor, and the boat goes quiet. This is the heart of the day: the swim platform comes alive, some guests are in the water while others stretch out on the flybridge sunpad, and the light snacks and drinks come out in the cockpit.

From there the shape of the day is yours. A two or three hour charter might be a single relaxed swim stop and a slow cruise back in time for dinner ashore. A half day gives you room to move on to a second anchorage, perhaps east towards Cabopino, with a longer spell at anchor in between. A full eight-hour day stretches the whole thing out: a leisurely run west towards Estepona, a long lunch at anchor in the saloon or cockpit, an afternoon in the water and a gentle return as the light begins to soften. Throughout, the skipper handles the navigation, the anchoring and the boat, so the only decisions you have to make are where to swim next and whether to be on the flybridge or in the shade.

Itineraries and Cruising Grounds

Puerto Banus sits in the middle of one of the most rewarding stretches of coast in the western Mediterranean, which means the Azimut 39 has genuine choice in every direction. The right itinerary depends on how long you have booked and what kind of day you are after, and your skipper will tailor the route to the conditions on the day. These are the main options.

- ♦ The Golden Mile swim stop. The classic short charter. A gentle cruise east towards Marbella town along the coast of villas and beach clubs, with an anchor stop to swim in the clear water close to shore. Perfect for a two to three hour outing.
- ♦ East to Cabopino. A slightly longer run towards the pretty marina and dune-backed beaches at Cabopino, one of the nicest natural stretches on this part of the coast. A good target for a four to five hour half day with a lunch stop along the way.
- ♦ West to Estepona. The coast opens up and quietens down as you head west, with space to anchor away from the busiest beaches. A natural full-day destination with plenty of time in the water.
- ♦ Longer runs towards Gibraltar. On a full eight-hour charter in settled weather, the dramatic profile of the Rock and the Strait comes into view to the west. It is a big day on the water and one for calm conditions, but a memorable one.

What links all of these is the backdrop. Almost the entire cruise is run with La Concha, the distinctive shell-shaped mountain above Marbella, standing over the town, and on clear days the view stretches across the Alboran Sea towards the mountains of North Africa. The water here is generally calm in the summer months, sheltered by the lie of the coast, which is part of why this stretch became such a natural home for day charters in the first place. The flybridge on the Azimut 39 is the ideal place to take it all in, and the boat's 18-knot cruise means even the longer westward runs are comfortably within reach of a full-day charter.

Who This Boat Suits

With a capacity of up to eleven guests, the Azimut 39 sits in the sweet spot for a wide range of groups and occasions. She is large enough to host a real party but small enough to feel personal, and the split between flybridge, cockpit and saloon means a mixed group is well catered for whatever the weather and whatever people are in the mood for.

She is a particularly strong choice for celebrations: a birthday on the water, a stag or hen day, an anniversary, or simply a group of friends marking the start of a holiday. The flybridge sunpad and the social second helm give these days a relaxed, sociable centre of gravity, and the included drinks selection of water, soft drinks, beer, white wine and cava means the toast is already taken care of. She suits families too, with the shaded saloon offering a cool retreat for younger or older guests while everyone else swims, and the skipper taking the worry out of the day so parents can relax.

For groups deciding between boats, the Azimut 39's distinguishing feature is that flybridge. If the upper sun-deck experience is what you are picturing, sitting up top with a drink as the coast slides past and the sun overhead, this is the boat that delivers it without moving into superyacht territory. She is the Italian counterpart to the more traditional Spanish day yachts in the same size class, and for many guests the modern lines and the extra deck are exactly what tip the decision in her favour.

Pricing and Inclusions

The Azimut 39 charts on the Tier A rate band, the band for a 12.5 m motor yacht. All prices below are per charter, not per person, and they are genuinely all-inclusive. The minimum charter is two hours.

DURATION	RATE (ALL-INCLUSIVE)
2 hours	€749
3 hours	€1,049
4 hours	€1,299
5 hours	€1,549
6 hours	€1,799
7 hours	€2,099
8 hours (full day) BEST VALUE	€2,299

Because the rate is per boat, the cost per head falls as the group grows. A full eleven guests sharing a full-day charter brings the price per person down considerably, which is part of why the boat works so well for celebrations. Every charter includes the following, with no extras to settle at the marina:

- ✦ Licensed skipper
- ✦ Fuel
- ✦ Drinks (water, soft drinks, beer, white wine, cava)
- ✦ Light snacks
- ✦ Insurance
- ✦ Safety equipment
- ✦ VAT (21%)

It is worth dwelling on how unusual that list is. Fuel and a qualified skipper are the two costs that most often appear as surprises on a charter elsewhere, and both are already in the price here. Spanish VAT at 21 per cent is included as well, so the figure you see is the figure you pay. You are welcome to bring your own food aboard for the longer charters, and the saloon and cockpit make comfortable spaces for a proper lunch at anchor.

SECTION 09

Seasonality and Booking Practicalities

The Costa del Sol earns its name, with a long and reliable charter season and some of the sunniest weather in mainland Europe. In practice the prime window runs from late spring through to early autumn, when the sea is warm, the water is calm and the days are long. July and August are the peak: the conditions are at their best and the demand is at its highest, so morning slots in particular tend to book out well in advance. If your dates fall in high summer, it is worth enquiring early to secure the time you want.

The shoulder months either side, namely May, June, September and October, are a quiet secret. The weather is still very much made for the water, the light is beautiful, the sea is warm from the summer, and the coast is noticeably calmer than at the height of the season. For groups with flexible dates, these months often offer the most relaxed version of the same day. As with all open-water charters, the skipper has the final word on routing and timing based on the conditions on the morning of your trip, which is part of what keeps the day safe and comfortable.

Booking the Azimut 39 is deliberately simple. Departures are from Puerto Banus, and your skipper meets you at the berth around fifteen minutes before the agreed time for the welcome and briefing. The essentials to bring are few: swimwear, towels, sunscreen and sunglasses, and soft-soled shoes or bare feet for the deck. Everything else is already aboard: the drinks, the snacks, the safety equipment and the skipper. Availability, photographs and routes can be checked and the boat reserved at boatrentalinmarbella.com, with longer or bespoke charters quoted directly over WhatsApp.

Frequently Asked Questions

How many guests can the Azimut 39 carry?

Up to eleven guests, in addition to the licensed skipper who runs the boat.

Where does the boat depart from?

All charters leave from Puerto Banus in Marbella. Your skipper meets you at the berth shortly before departure.

Is a skipper included, or do I need a licence?

A licensed skipper is included in every rate, so no licence or boating experience is needed on your part. The skipper handles the navigation, the anchoring and the boat throughout the day.

What is included in the price?

Every charter includes the skipper, fuel, drinks (water, soft drinks, beer, white wine and cava), light snacks, insurance, safety equipment and VAT at 21 per cent. The prices are per boat and all-inclusive, with no extras to settle at the marina.

What does it cost?

The Azimut 39 is on the Tier A rate band. Charters start at €749 for two hours and run to €2,299 for a full eight-hour day, with the minimum charter being two hours. Because the rate is per boat, the cost per person falls as the group grows.

What is the flybridge and why does it matter?

The flybridge is the open upper deck above the saloon, with a second set of helm controls and a sunbathing pad. It is the highest comfortable seat on the boat and the best vantage point for the coastal views, and it is the feature that most distinguishes the Azimut 39 from single-deck day yachts of the same size.

Can the boat be used overnight?

Yes. She has two cabins plus a convertible saloon, so she is suitable for the occasional overnight as well as day charters. Longer and bespoke charters are quoted over WhatsApp.

When is the best time to book?

July and August offer the warmest, calmest conditions but book up fastest, especially morning slots. The shoulder months of May, June, September and October offer much the same weather with a calmer, quieter coast. Enquire early for high-summer dates.
